

Wednesday, June 27, 2018

Worcester resident James Starbuck joins co-workers helping clean Boston Harbor

James Starbuck of Worcester poses with his canine companion Athena while helping with the shoreline cleanup at Carson Beach in South Boston. [Submitted Photo]

BOSTON — Staff from Coca-Cola of Northern New England, including James Starbuck of Worcester, joined Save the Harbor/Save the Bay on June 23 in a day of service at the Department of Recreation and Conservation's Carson Beach in South Boston.

Coca-Cola employees spent the morning cleaning up the beach's shoreline. Many brought along family members, getting their kids involved at a young age with beach preservation efforts.

The early morning volunteers collected litter and debris from along the entire shoreline and walkways for several hours. DCR staff supplied the team of over 20 people with trash pickers and garbage bags, and helped to haul away the bags once filled. The team made it down the entire stretch of beach, clearing away numerous bagfuls of bottles, plastics, cigarette butts, and other litter.