

Skip Tull photos, unless otherwise noted | September 20, 2018

Festival bids fond farewell to summer season

Save the Harbor/Save the Bay and the state Department of Conservation and Recreation's Life's a Beach program brought performers from the Boston Circus Guild to Endless Summer last Saturday. [Photo use courtesy of Save the Harbor/Save the Bay]

Save the Harbor and the state DCR's Life's a Beach activities at Saturday's Endless Summer Waterfront Festival included performers from the Boston Circus Guild, featuring a stilt walker, a hula hooper, a juggler and a pair of acrobats, who delighted the crowd with their skills. In addition, a storytelling pirate brought to life stories of young people from the Age of Sail. [Courtesy photos, Save the Harbor/Save the Bay]

Hannah Leader's smiling face matched her dress after she was first in line for free face-painting offered by The Anchor, a community organization that offers support to people impacted by substance use disorder. [Courtesy photo]

Marybeth and John Lidington enjoyed Hull's signature late-summer event with their son, John Robert, his wife, Robin, and their son, John, who's known as Jack. [Patricia Abbate photo]

Save the Harbor/Save the Bay staff helped to educate community members about plastic marine pollution and the importance of recycling through Robyn Reed's interactive art installation, Changing Course. This project transforms found plastic water bottles into a school of fish. Throughout the event children and families created and contributed their own 'fish' to the piece.

The hotdog-eating contest is an annual Endless Summer crowd-pleaser.

Ruth Mullen and Nancy De-Forest Courier helped staff the Hull Garden Club's table. [Photo use courtesy of Shirley Moloney]

Chamber of Commerce administrator Robin Flint stole a moment from coordinating this year's Endless Summer festival to check on her husband, Stephen Gore, who was serving up their delicious – and award-winning – Townie Frozen Desserts